

What is a political action committee?

Business membership organizations like the Independent Insurance Agents of NC (IIANC) set up political action committees (PAC) to support candidates who are aligned on that industry's key issues. PACs have been around for many years, and are an efficient and effective way for independent insurance agents to participate in the electoral process.

How do PACs work?

Coupled with the legislative presence of IIANC's lobbyist in Raleigh and personal relationships between individual independent agents have with key elected officials, iPAC is an important third leg of the stool supporting advocacy efforts on behalf of independent agents. iPAC makes possible support for state legislative candidates of both parties who are aligned on issues important to the independent insurance agency business model. Decisions on which candidates receive a contribution from iPAC are made by fellow independent agents serving on the IIANC Governmental Affairs Committee.

What's the right amount to contribute?

The amount you give is entirely up to you, but remember that contributing to iPAC supports your profession, and shows you are committed to helping ensure you and all independent agents can prosper now and in the future. Whatever your ideological or partisan disposition, it's simply true that to be an effective advocate for you, IIANC must have strong relationships with all elected officials who make the laws and regulations that agencies must operate under. To make it easier for you, your iPAC contribution can be made in monthly installments charged automatically using a personal credit card.
